

CONFEDERATE VETERANS

Have Taken the City of Memphis but They Did It Peacefully.

Memphis, Tenn.—Quaveringly voicing the cheers with which they went into battle, the remnants of the Confederacy have charged down upon Memphis and made a peaceful conquest of the city. For the next three days, during the annual session of the United Confederate Veterans and affiliated organizations, the old "boys" in gray will be the honored guests of the city. An elaborate program of entertainments has been arranged in their honor, including a music festival by the United Confederate Choirs, an organization promoted by Colonel William H. Stewart, of Portsmouth, Va.

This society of the sweet singers of the South has already spread throughout Dixie and its rendition of the old songs will be one of the great features of the reunion.

Colonel Stewart is author of "The Spirit of the South," a publication that was placed on the market about six years ago, and met with splendid success. His idea in organizing the United Confederate Choirs was purely for the purpose of bringing to life many old songs sung around the camp fires during the trying times from 1861 to 1865. The Federation is on a military basis, simply to give effectual training to its members. The uniform is intended to designate the members on duty and the titles, with the little gray jackets, are to recall the historic days of the splendid warriors of the South.

General Evans responded to the address of welcome. In part it was as follows:

"When Confederate soldiers meet there is a peculiarity in their greetings which shows the high esteem in which they hold their comradeship. The warm and strong handclasp, the kindling eyes from which in them may start, and sometimes an irrepressible mutual hug characterize the greeting, and are all genuine. The bearing of the Confederate soldier marks him also as a man on whom great historical events, in which he acted his part, have made their lasting glorifying impression on himself. He has the appearance of one who has carried a long while in mind some great convictions and memories which make men noble. People take note of him as he passes; they point him out to their children; they say 'there goes a Confederate soldier.'"

"The war in which these comrades were true Confederate soldiers had been over nearly twenty-five years before they organized the United Confederate Veterans' Association, but during those first distressful decades after the fall of the Confederacy they drew together in various bodies of survivors until the thoughtful suggestion of a closer union led to the formation of the present brotherhood about twenty years ago."

"These faithful soldiers of the South had returned to their States and their homes, sad hearted indeed, but they laid hold of their problems with the firm purpose to solve them in honor and with safety for all interests concerned. Never before was a great army disbanded and turned loose upon a country on only the soldiers' parole of honor, with freedom to travel over a vast prostrated land occupied by women and children. But the brave men who had fought nobly for their rights to the end of a four year's bloody war could be depended on to return peaceably to their homes as soldiery gentlemen."

"No body of disbanded soldiers were ever before confronted with such an important task as that which required the instant attention of the returning citizen soldiery of the South; but they carried their same soldierly sense of honor to the field action in civil life. Their willingness and ability to rescue their Southland from ruin; their courage in facing arrogant obstacles, their readiness to seek and maintain the highest good of our whole country, and at the same time save their endangered principles, were tested in a hundred ways during the first decade of peace; but they came out of each tense trial without the loss of one manly virtue. It is also an impressive fact, here appropriately mentioned, that in all the years required for the restoration of the South to its present marvellous prosperity, not one act hostile to the welfare of the whole country was ever attempted; not one breach of the terms of surrender, nor one movement to thwart the true results of the war between the States ever occurred. On the contrary, they have recognized, from those times until now, the wider, although not the stronger relation they bear to our reunited country, to each of its States and to all of its people. As American citizens, as well as citizens of their respective States, the Confederate soldiers have wielded a powerful influence, but the results of that influence show the wisdom of their ideas, while the grand effects of their endeavors prove that no other body of people can serve their government, both State and Federal, more faithfully, and without other reward than that which conscience and conscious patriotism bestow."

"It is a pleasing memory of the soldiers of this confederation that the warm greetings of the people have been given them forty-four successive years since their return from the fields of battle. Many cities have honored them with generous hospitalities, beginning from the days when they were numerous and strong and continuing until now, when they are few and old. Their numbers are reduced, but public esteem has steadily increased, and it is evident to all men that the true Confederate soldier is respected and honored more highly now than ever. The forty thousand gray-haired surviving veterans, distributed throughout nearly all our country's territory, are gazed upon with reverential affection, and when they shall have decreased to only a thousand strong the cities will still vie with each other to entertain them, while thousands of people will gather to behold them at sunset parade in their good old Confederate gray."

"Their children and childrens' children have now in hand the government of the Southland they love, and they will progressively and honorably direct its policies, improve its institutions, narrate its history, develop its resources, keep its character clean, and conserve its morality and liberties."

The Commander-in-Chief then reviewed the events of the past year, touched briefly upon the subjects of monuments, the work of the history committee, and other kindred topics. His address was very lengthy and one of the most masterly ever heard at a reunion of the veterans, and these reunions have been marked by the addresses of some of the South's most masterly orators.

The Value of Good Digestion

Is easy to figure if you know what your stomach is worth. Kodol keeps the stomach at par value, by insuring good digestion. Kodol cures Dyspepsia.

Kodol insures good digestion by absolutely duplicating Nature's normal process, in perfectly digesting all food taken into the stomach.

While Kodol is doing this, the stomach is resting—and becoming strong and healthy. A strong and healthy stomach guarantees a sound and active brain.

The man with a sound stomach—a stomach that is doing for the body just what Nature intended it to do—is the man who is always prepared for any emergency. He is "there with the goods."

The man with a sick stomach, is a man sick all over. When the stomach is irritated by undigested food, the blood and heart are directly affected. Then dizziness, unnatural sleepiness, sick-headaches, vertigo and fainting spells, and even serious brain trouble develop. Kodol will prevent these.

Spurring the stomach and brain to special effort by "tonics" and "stimulants" doesn't cure anything, or accomplish any good. Neither does dieting. Indigestion and the serious ailments which it induces can be averted and corrected only by natural means.

Kodol supplies this natural means. It performs the stomach's work for it—just as the stomach should perform it—while the stomach takes a little rest, "for the stomach's sake."
